

Is Jesus enough?

David Posey

How can we be called “mature Christians” if we pursue happiness in all the wrong places?

Do I need a book on parenting to know how to bring up faithful children? Do I need a marriage enrichment course to learn how to love my wife?

There is nothing wrong with these things, in themselves, but until we can sincerely say, “Christ is enough,” then we have a ways to go in our journey to mature faith.

If you want to focus on one goal in 2018 that will envelop every other worthwhile goal, simply set your sights on getting to know Jesus better. Are you a father? You’ll be the kind of dad you need to be if you simply “put on Christ.” Are you a wife? You’ll be the best wife a man could ask for if you will study the words and example of Jesus and put the principles into practice.

We don’t need “better” husbands, wives, fathers and mothers; we don’t need “better” elders and deacons and preachers; we don’t need to behave “better.”

We need Jesus.
